Navy Lieutenant Daniel S. Keefe, son of Ruth M. Keefe of Cohasset, recently cruised under the North Pole. He is the weapons officer aboard the fast attack nuclear submarine USS Archerfish, homeported in Groton, Conn. His submarine has arrived in Devonport, England, following the two-month voyage that covered nearly 13,000 miles. The archerfish remained submerged for 48 days during the trip and surfaced at the North Pole to enable crewmembers to take a walk on the polar ice cap. The Arctic voyage was made to gather oceanographic information and to maintain the capability of operating submarines in polar conditions. The Archerfish's cruise under the Arctic ice cap coincided with the submarine service's 79th anniversary as well as the 70th anniversary of Commander Robert E. Peary's first visit to the North Pole. The Archerfish is 292-feet long and has a crew of 120 officers and enlisted men. She is armed with antiship and antisubmarine missiles and is designed to seek out and destroy enemy submarines as well as surface vessels. Keefe is a 1968 graduate of Thayer Academy, Braintree, Mass., and a 1972 graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy, with a Bachelor of Science degree.
